The structure of the citrus bitter principle limonin was determined in 1960. The number of structurally defined members of this class of natural products (now called limonoids) has grown to several hundred. However, all of these compounds are derivable by such biosynthetic processes from the simpler predecessor shown below.

A recent synthesis of the above compound involved the following reaction.

Propose a mechanism for this reaction.